Freedom Summer was a campaign in Mississippi organized by a coalition of civil rights organizations in the summer of 1964 to attempt to register as many African-American voters as possible in the state, which had historically excluded most blacks from voting. The project also set up dozens of Freedom Schools, Freedom Houses, and community centers in small towns throughout Mississippi to aid the local black population.