

Junior Seminar
REL 3931.6859, Spring 2019
Tues 8-9 (3:00-3:50; 4:05-4:55) / Thurs 9 (4:05-4:55), And 19

Professor: Dr. Robert Kawashima office hours: Tuesday 9:30-10:30; Thursday 1:15-2:15
email: rsk@ufl.edu
office: 120 Anderson
Department of Religion: 107 Anderson

Course Description:

This seminar will introduce students to several major approaches to the study of religion, using Daniel Pals's textbook as a guide. Since no guide, however knowledgeable, can take the place of the primary thinkers themselves, we will also read excerpts from a number of major theorists, including some not covered by Pals. Theories of religion, in turn, cannot be understood in isolation as so many abstract ideas. We will therefore analyze various passages from the Hebrew Bible (Old Testament) as empirical data with which to test some of these theories. What light (if any) does a given theory or approach shed on the Hebrew Bible and Israelite religion? The study of religion, moreover, presupposes certain critical concepts, which we must reflect on. What is Religion? What does it mean to make it an object of knowledge? What is a science, a theory, an approach? What questions can and should a theory of Religion seek to answer? Is the study of religion even a discipline – in the way that, say, mathematics and history are disciplines? What does this imply about the topic taught by our department? Finally, as one of the Religion Department's core major requirements, this seminar will actively seek to cultivate within students the all-important skills of careful reading and thinking. How should one read, think about, and interpret a religious text, a theoretical text, a scholarly text?

Required Textbooks:

Daniel L. Pals, Nine Theories of Religion
HarperCollins Study Bible - Student Edition (recommended) additional secondary readings, course materials, and general information will, as much as possible, be made available through e-Learning: <https://elearning.ufl.edu>.
